Germany is a popular destination for American students seeking a graduate degree abroad: with many tuition-free, English-taught graduate programs, German universities equip students with a top-notch international education and unique edge to adapt to the global marketplace. The Germany Grad Fair 2017 in New York City will introduce you to a wide range of graduate opportunities in all subject fields.

Planning to pursue a graduate degree abroad can seem overwhelming. This event is designed to help you navigate the process – from finding the right program and university to understanding the requirements and application process. We will also address other aspects of studying in Germany, such as cost of living, visa and residence permits, health insurance, accommodation, and student jobs. There will also be plenty of opportunities to meet representatives from various German universities, funding agencies, and partner organizations.

Who should attend: undergraduate and graduate students in all fields, young professionals, career service advisors

Participating institutions: Bucerius Law School, Freie Universität Berlin, Heidelberg University Association, Hochschule Fresenius University of Applied Sciences, Ludwig-Maximilians-Universität München, University Alliance Ruhr, UAS 7 – German Universities of Applied Sciences, University of Cologne, University of Freiburg & Eucor the European Campus
